Lesson: Teaching Non-Fiction Labels

I brought my students to the carpet and said, "Today we are going to learn about an important text feature called labels. When we read nonfiction, the author will label a picture or photo so the reader knows what that is a picture of and/or can see the different parts of the object. This helps the reader to understand both the picture and the text better. I am going to read a nonfiction book now and we are going to talk about the labels in this book."
